General information in connection with the transport of live animals.

Following some important information about the transportation of live animals at sea:

- All shipments of vehicles transporting live animals must be examined and released in advance by the shipping company or the port office on admissibility. Generally, the transport of live animals has to be announced in the port in written form, at least 48 hours before departure.
- The shipment must be done only in authorised vehicles. The driver is responsible for the provision of the necessary documentation of Animals (diplomas, certificates and possibly customs documents), and must take care during the crossing about the welfare of the animals (supply of fodder, etc.).
- Any vehicle that is to be shipped on board a ferry has to have appropriate lashing points to be secured seaworthy on deck. A shipment without sufficient number of lashing points is in the responsibility of each load master or captain.
- The company reserves the right at any time and without notice to change the timetable, the vessel or loading equipment. This affects also already confirmed reservations.
- Generally, always the master of the ship has got the last decision, whether a vehicle intended for shipment is admitted or not. In addition, the captain always has the right to refuse the shipment of live animals e.g. because of bad weather.

We hope, this is of any help to you, please do not hesitate to ask for further explanations!
